

EMMIR 2018 ALUMNI TRACER SURVEY

Since 2011, the European Master in Migration and Intercultural Relations runs under the European Label of Excellence, Erasmus Mundus. It is fully accredited and graduates are awarded a joint degree by the seven EMMIR partner universities. It provides profound theoretical and methodological skills in migration studies combined with field work in Europe and Africa. It is designed as a multidisciplinary programme that addresses important contemporary issues in an emerging field of study. EMMIR includes study periods in both Europe and Africa. Students' mobility is understood as a key to mutual understanding of different views and cultures of migration and movement and will sharpen intercultural sensitivity.

Each year, students graduating the EMMIR program begin a new phase in their lives. In 2018, we sent out an Alumni Impact Survey to gain some insight into the broader trends of our graduates, of the labour market, how employers value our degrees, and to inform our current and future students about career opportunities post-EMMIR. The Alumni Impact Survey received 71 responses, about 56% of alumni. What we found is a large majority of students who believe that their EMMIR experiences and degrees have helped them find jobs, assisted in their professional development, assisted in the development of their personalities, and would choose to study EMMIR again. The results from this survey attest to the quality of the education, internships, and experiences that EMMIR students receive at our 7 partner institutions and 60+ associate partner institutions. Students thus become part of a network of more than 60 organizations in 31 countries and over 130 alumni. Before we dive into the results of the alumni, survey, let's take a look at some numbers that help to give an overview of our diverse student body...

“EMMIR is an actor for social change that goes beyond academia and connects theories with field practice. The program encouraged me to create a non-profit media organization in Germany, ‘Migration Heute’ where we debate on media discourses and the representation of minorities across the EU member states.” - Jean, EMMIR graduate

“How does one describe a programme that provides you with extensive empirical opportunities and hyper-diversity whilst consistnetly performing at high academic standards? One word: phenomenal! Beware, intellectually inspiring yet emotionally challenging, but a great life experince; one that enriches you and makes you reinvent yourself and the worlds you inhabit.” - Jafar, EMMIR graduate
